Conferences & Meetings @ the Round Room

A Brief History

The Round room was built in 1821 for the much-anticipated visit of King George IV. Later the Room was to be the stage for the most important moment in the conception of the Republic of Ireland. On the 21st of January 1919, the First Dail Eireann was held in the Round Room.

In 1921, 100 years after its construction to receive the English Monarch, it was in this room that the Anglo-Irish Treaty of 1921 was ratified. It was the signing of this treaty that Michael Collins considered the signing of his own death warrant, it was also the treaty that created the Irish Free State, and that led to the Irish Civil War

Round Room Overview

The Round Room at the Mansion House is the perfect city centre venue for your conference or meeting. Located on the vibrant Dawson Street only steps from Dail Éireann and Stephens Green this magnificent venue is unrivalled.

The Round Room at the Mansion house is an unusual and impressive conference space. It is not often that you can combine a prestigious address, with sublime architectural features, and a dedicated acclaimed Restaurant, as well as all of your conferencing and event requirements.

As the name suggests, the Round Room is a circular room, 30 metres in diameter with a domed roof. The shape of the room and open internal structure lends itself ideally to conferences, meetings and exhibitions with no architectural barriers or awkward corners.

The room also manages to retain character and integrity, whilst lending itself to personalisation. With open spaces, the use of lights and gobos and graphics, this room can look different, individual and personal on any day of the week. The versatility of the room will work as a blank canvas for you and, working closely with your event manager, you can make the room your own.

A semi circular balcony overlooks the Round Room and provides the ideal location to display projects, showcase products. Alternatively, it offers an area for food & beverage for guests to relax and admire the view over the Round Room.
